

BLANCO

Blanco Tequila is typically unaged tequila, but can age for up to 60 days and still be considered Blanco. This is the most pure flavor expression of the agave plant.

REPOSADO

Reposado, meaning rested, is aged in wood barrels for atleast 2 months and as long as a year. Reposado still maintains the purity of the agave while adding a little extra flavor and texture from the wood.

TEQUILA LIST

ANEJO

Meaning aged, Anejo, rests in an oak barrel, often a spent bourbon barrel, for a minimum of eight months and up to three years. Extra

Anejo is anything aged longer than three years and can sometimes be 15 or more years. Tequila aging in barrels in the heat (in Jalisco, Mexico) sees around 10% “Angel Share” per year, which is the amount of liquid that will evaporate from a barrel. This leads to their cost and their rarity! Cheers!

MEZCAL

Mezcal, unlike tequila, can come from any type of agave plant and can also come from one of 9 the growing states in Mexico. To technically be mezcal, the spirit needs to be 100% agave and just needs to be cooked. However, sometimes Mezcal is cooked and smoked in an in-ground pit, covered with tarps and cooked for the course of several days. This can impart a smokey flavor in the agave spirit.
